RESEARCH PARTICIPANT VOLUNTEER'S

BILL of RIGHTS

Every person has rights. Researchers at the University of Utah want you to be aware of your rights.

You or your loved one has the right:

To be told why the research study is being done.

To be told what would be different from your regular care and what will be the same.

To be told what the risks and side effects are, including any discomforts.

To be told if there are any benefits to you for taking part in the research study and what they are.

To be told of ALL of your options and their risks and benefits.

To be told what medical care is available to you in case of injury or complications from taking part in the research study.

To take your time to decide if taking part is right for you.

To take time to ask questions, before and during the research study.

To choose NOT to take part in the research study at any time. Your right to medical care will NOT be affected if you decide not to take part in the research study.

To make your decision without pressure or force.

To be given a copy of the signed and dated consent form.

If you have any questions or concerns about your rights, or the rights of a loved one, please contact your research doctor.

You may also contact the University of Utah Institutional Review Board (IRB) at (801) 581-3655 or the Research Participant Advocate at (801) 581-3803.
